FLOWERS WERE LAID

speak. In the course of his remarks, which were frequently interrupted with bursts of applause, he told of his enlistment in the confederate army, and of four years of service under Lee and Jackson. He referred to the conditions which the confederate soldiers had to face on their return from the war, and to the problems and struggles of the fifty years that have passed since that time. He praised the many men, who, in that struggle fought as men should for what they believed to be right. In conclusion, he pledged the loyalty of the men of the south to the stars and stripes and said they would be the first to respond to the call for arms.

Col. Geo. Leroy Brown, professor of military science at the State University, and for 45 years in the regular army, with eloquence inspired by deepest patriotic feeling, made the speech of the afternoon.

Colonel Brown's Address

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Governor, Mr. Mayor, ladies and gentlemen I thank you one and all on the part of these my comrades, the old soldiers who are still with you. I thank you for your kindly aid to us this day in paying our respects to those who wore the blue and the grey, who fought as all true men will ever fight for what they believe to be just and what they believe to be right. Honorable soldiers, all who, in their last camp now rest in peace.

It is meet and proper that the great hearted men, our Governor and your Mayor, who are courageously striving for the betterment of city and state, should bear testimony to the service rendered by the soldiers whose last resting place has this day been decorated with flowers. I, as an old soldier, on the part of these, my comrades, thank them for their eloquent tributes to the patriot dead.

Through the ages devoted men have marched forth with banners flying and martial music quickening their ardent hearts, marched forth and left behind them loved ones to patiently wait for their return or to mourn because they returned not.

There are heroes at home as well as heroes on the battle field. All hail to the memory of the patriot mothers at home who in the memory of the patriot sweethearts.

If our glorious flag was stained red by patriot blood, if it were soiled with filth, then was it washed white in equal parts by patriot tears shed in desolate homes.

Honor is due the mothers and sweethearts not only that they have suffered and mourned, but because also they have inspired manly virtues in the hearts of men. Patriot women have ever striven to develop in husbands, sons and lovers the qualities that make true soldiers.

And my comrades let us not forget that let us not forget to bear testimony to the service of the young soldiers who are with us here today, the National Guard. The citizen soldiers of this state and the citizen soldiers of all the states deserve honor and praise for their service. They have given freely of their time and energies, they have denied themselves pleasure and they have striven bravely under many disadvantages and lack of proper encouragement to train themselves to do their part honorably when their country calls.

To be ready to march forth and battle for the right; march forth and battle that the emblem of freedom shall continue to float over a free, an honorable and a progressive people; over a people whose ancestors fought for a high ideal of a just government, founded on the equality of men under the law. A government thus fought for shall not be overthrown, shall not go backward toward the ideal of other days when the masses of men were slaves. NO! Our young men inspired with patriotism by loving and courageous mothers and sweethearts, will continue to train themselves in the manly art of war.

Comrades, shall I tell them the qualities of good soldiers, proven out on the march, on the field and on the field of battle?

The qualities these young soldiers are striving to cultivate and must acquire, to be efficient and trustworthy, are cleanliness and strength of body, a kindly and charitable heart, a disciplined mind, a habit of obedience to properly constituted authority, loyalty, faithfulness and honesty in the performance of duty, and undaunted soul and courage to do the right and to shun the wrong. They must learn to shoot straight and to be straight.

I say to you good people within the reach of my voice today and my heart cries out to good Americans all over this free land of ours, encourage the young soldiers to learn the rules of the game, that they may successfully fight for the maintenance of right and for the redress of wrong.

Why were the masses of men held for ages in abject bondage to the sovereign few? Because those few had learned the rules of the game and could control themselves and could control others. Every American father should be a king, every American mother a queen and all should rule for the uplift of mankind.

As you build beautiful homes that the members of the family may learn to love the home, as you erect beautiful buildings that business may prosper, as you build beautiful churches that religion may be fostered, as you build beautiful school houses that education may be made easier and more attractive, so build ye in your wonderful city, so far advanced in other ways that tend to make all happier and better, a fitting home for your citizen soldiers. A home for patriotism, as a fitting monument to the patriot dead, where young soldiers may be trained to follow in their footsteps. A home where young men may be trained in the manly virtues of true soldiers. These young soldiers who stand ready to day to answer the call to arms are worthy of encouragement and they should be encouraged to equip themselves to defend their country's flag—to defend their country's honor—to do a man's

Memorial Day Morning

Headed by the First Regiment band under the direction of Dr. F. H. Redewill, three companies of the National Guard, the Tempe Normal cadets, and the Spanish war veterans, formed in line at Sixth avenue and Washington, and marched through the business district to the city hall plaza, where the morning exercises were held.

Here a large crowd had collected around the speakers stand, on which were grouped the veterans of the union and confederate armies. Capt. P. P. Parker, of the G. A. R. presided, and after a short address, called on Chaplain McDele who offered the ritual prayer. After a selection by the quartet, Col. J. H. McClintock read Lincoln's immortal address at Gettysburg. One feature of the morning program was the bass solo by Col. Cogins, which was warmly applauded. Then came the decoration of the monument in front of the platform by the members of the Women's Relief corps with appropriate ceremony.

Following the singing of "Native Land, My Native Land," by the quartet, the audience rose in response to their invitation and joined in singing "America."

The address of the day was then delivered by Comrade G. W. Barrows, who held the close attention of the large audience throughout. After an eloquent tribute to the men who lie sleeping on a hundred battlefields, and to the work of the Women's Relief corps, he turned to the Spanish war veterans, and reminded them of the example which had been set in the days of '61. To the ex-confederates he said,

"We found you foes worthy of our steel, and shake hands today as heartily and call you brother as we call each other comrade."

In conclusion, Mr. Barrows spoke to the young people present on the subject of patriotism. "The great questions of the day," he said, "demanded that you rise above party affiliations, be an American citizen before you are anything else. Remember that patriotism is not simply going into battle and fighting for your country. Remember the responsibility rests not with the impersonal they, but with you. Today we leave you the flag for which we offered our lives, and we say to you, 'Take it and see that no star in that field is ever dimmed, and that that flag is never trailed in the dust under any circumstance.' It is your country, and your flag."

Comrade Andrew Downing followed with a poem written for the day, and which appears on the editorial page this morning, a patriotic selection by the band, and "Taps," the column formed for the march to the Carnegie Library. Great credit is due the officers of J. W. Owen Post, G. A. R., the United Confederate Veterans, Adjutant General Harris and the officers of Arizona Camp No. 1, United States Spanish war veterans for the successful execution of the order of the day. The First Regiment band, under the able leadership of Dr. F. H. Redewill, did itself proud, adding in no small measure to the success of the occasion.

The Memorial Day celebration was said by veterans to have attracted a large attendance and to have elicited great popular interest than any within the history of J. W. Owen Post, G. A. R.

There is not a performer in the tag show doing better all-around work than Hal Chase. The White Sox star is fairly eating 'em alive around the first station.

GIRLS HAVE DANDY TIME AT EAST LAKE

Notwithstanding three or four other special attractions last Thursday night, the V. W. C. A. frolic at Eastlake park was a pronounced success.

The "after six" o'clock cars each brought a load of jolly girls. So many came, that the committee on refreshments began to wonder whether or not they had provided sufficient to supply the demand, they had provided for 100, although of course there was plenty. It was artistically arranged, delicious and different from the usual picnic spread. Everybody had a good time and there was not a dull moment for anybody. The late cars brought the last merry group from the park. There were so many funny stunts the girls decided they had plenty of talent for a circus of their own. Altogether it was pleasant, the most successful of the many pleasant social affairs which the V. W. C. A. has given this winter. It was so decidedly pleasant, that groups of girls are planning to spend the Thursday half holiday in shady places and lunch together. These groups are elastic and will enlarge to admit any Y. W. C. A. girl who cares, to join the group.

Alcock, who has been playing third base for the White Sox since Harry Lord left the team, is putting up a rattling good game at the hot corner.

Steve Evans of the Brooklyn Feds must have found a magic bat, for he is displaying the highest batting average of any player in the three big leagues.

Besides leading the Cincinnati Reds in stick work, Moran is doing brilliant service in the outfield for the speedy gents from Ohio.

The Standardized Car

We will leave the charm of this car for you yourselves to interpret. We do not wish to spoil your anticipation with any faint word-picture. We want the effect to be spontaneous, sudden, so that the full beauty of this poem in steel, its long, sweeping lines, its luxury, its superbness, its exclusiveness of design will burst upon you with your first vision of it.

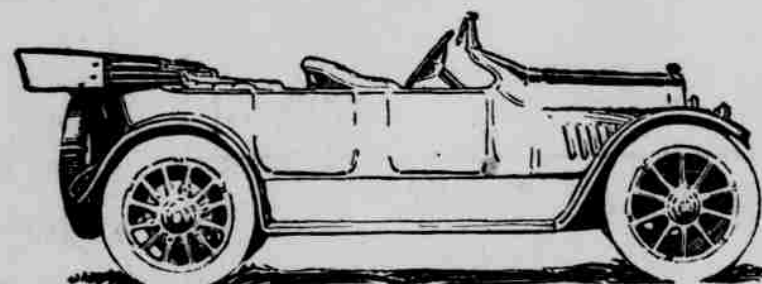

There is but one word that will be adequate:

"MINE!" That's the word which means personal possession.

This car has a thrill to it just as every victory possesses a thrill. What though it be a mechanical victory—it is none the less an artistic triumph.

Make this thrill yours.

Take the word "Mine" and share its joys with those who live to breathe the fresh out-of-doors with you. Take your family in on the new thought.
